

FAMOUS RUSSELL CASE

Is Now Nearing Its Close In The Middlesex Probate Court In East Cambridge.

(Herald Special.) Boston, Mass., Jan. 22.—The most notable identity case ever tried before an American judge, a case rivaling in interest and resembling in many respects the famous Tichborne case in England a generation ago, is now nearing the close of its trial in the Middlesex probate court in East Cambridge. For nearly four months the public hereabouts has followed with intense interest the daily court proceedings which are expected to prove whether the North Dakota ranchman calling himself Daniel Blake Russell is really the son of Daniel Russell of Melrose, as he claims to be, or is a shrewd and daring impostor. For weeks the trial has formed a staple topic of discussion throughout New England. And, with the end of the trial in sight, it may be said that public opinion in regard to the validity of the claim seems to be as much divided as at the beginning of the famous case.

The trial has been enlivened with romantic features, surprises and sensations which would find difficulty of belief if appearing in a work of fiction. At first sight it would appear to be an easy matter for a man to prove his identity in a community where he has passed his boyhood until his eighteenth or nineteenth year and where many friends and relatives who had known him intimately as a youth were still living. And, on the other hand, it would seem preposterous for a man to believe that he could successfully impersonate another person in a community where that person had spent his youth and was still remembered by friends and relatives. And yet, friends, relatives and the general public who have followed the testimony day by day seem unable to agree on the solution of the question.

The testimony of the man who is trying to establish his identity as the long lost son of the late Daniel Russell, and thereby secure from the other son a half interest in the million dollar estate left by the elder Russell, is stranger than many a tale of romance and adventure. In his fight for recognition the claimant has told on the stand, in a simple way and with remarkable memory, of the events which took place in the home which he says he left in Melrose twenty-four years ago. For a time he lived the life of a tramp, getting from one part of the country to another as best he might. He has worked with circuses and as a deckhand, shod horses in blacksmith shops, and spent winters in lumber camps and mills in the Northwest. Finally he landed in North Dakota. There he was successful in speculations in hay and in cattle lands, and became a manager of ranches and a prosperous land owner.

To support his claim as Daniel Blake Russell there have been produced in court upwards of fifty witnesses to identify the claimant as the son of Daniel Russell. Of these, some have known him for forty years. They knew him intimately in many cases, and were acquainted with the peculiarities and characteristics of his youth. With the presentation of these witnesses, Senator Leslie A. Simpson of North Dakota, who is conducting the case for the plaintiff, rested his direct case.

To oppose this claim, the respondents have stated that the claimant is an impostor—not Daniel Blake Russell, but James Delbert Ruseau, who was born of poor parents in Bombay, N. Y. in 1865, three years after the birth of the rightful heir. They have produced a man and woman in court to testify that they are the brother and sister, respectively, of the claimant.

GOLDSBORO

HEARD FROM

A Lady Who Lives in Goldsboro Joins in the Chorus of Praise for Cardui, The Woman's Tonic.

Goldsboro, N. C.—"A physician treated me for many distressing symptoms," writes Mrs. Etta A. Smith, "but gave me no relief."

"I suffered with neuralgia around the heart and was troubled at times with my head. I had pain in my left side, bowels, left thigh, shoulders and arms."

"After taking Cardui, I am now well and can recommend it to other suffering women."

Just such doubtful symptoms, as those from which Mrs. Smith suffered, are the ones for which it will pay you to take Cardui, the woman's tonic.

It is at such times, when there is nothing to show, for certain, the real cause of the trouble, that you need a tonic, to give the body strength to throw off the illness that evidently threatens.

Take Cardui, when you are ill, with the ailments of your sex. Take Cardui as a tonic, to prevent illness, when you feel it coming.

The libel case brought by the government against the Press Publishing company, publishers of the New York World, on account of stories relating to alleged scandals in the purchase of the Panama Canal company's stock by the United States, is set for trial Monday in the United States circuit court at New York.

Another court proceeding that will attract much public attention is the trial of the "bleached flour" case in New Orleans. Involved in this case, which is the first of its kind to come to trial, is the long-standing controversy between the department of agriculture and the flour millers of the country as to the legality of manufacturing bleached flour.

A criminal case that has attracted widespread attention is set for trial in Detroit Tuesday, when Dr. George A. Fritch is to be tried for the alleged murder of Mabel Milman, whose dismembered body was found in the river near Detroit last summer. The girl, according to the charges made by the police, was the victim of a criminal operation performed by Dr. Fritch, who afterward sought to conceal the crime by cutting up the body and sinking it in the river.
